The diagram below shows how coffee is produced and prepared for sale in supermarkets and shops.

The diagram shows various stages of the production of coffee from coffee beans.

There are 11 main stages in the whole coffee making process, beginning with gathering coffee beans and ending with packaging coffee into jars.

Firstly, the coffee beans are picked and then are dried on field under the sun. After that, the beans are roasted before being cooled at the fourth step. In this stage, the cooling process must be done rapidly. At the next stage, those which are cooled are ground and hot water is added to the beans. After that, the resulting mixture is strained through a utensil to remove liquid. Moving on to the eighth stage, after being passed once again through the grinding machine, the mixture is frozen. Afterwards, they are dried in a vacuum to evaporate the water and the coffee is made. The entire coffee-making process concludes after the coffee is packed into jars for customers.
